The Duke of Wellington has ordered that no more than fifty lashes shall hereafter be given to a soldier. The soldier has reason to be grateful for this mark of kindness. In time of war the officer receives all the glory of a well fought battle, and the soldier has anyence and a pawter medal. The Government has now graciously reduced the number of lashes, the latter shall receive in time of peace, to fifty!

> [For the Whig and Courser] The Four Sisters.

I saw four easters, bright as day, I Wending their guileless joyous way, With buthesome song and spirits gay O or youth's alturing to

Soft was the sunshine overhead, The breeze was light that round them sped, And calm the happiness they shed Each in the other's path The future wo d with coloring high —
Drest out her scens in richest dye
To 'wilder the admiring eye
That linger d 'mid her charms

How sweet was life! as side by eide, With pulse which spoke health's bounding tide, The quartette wanner'd forth in pride, Strong in affection a power

Just then the storm-cloud envious lowered, Around their path its tury showered, Ruin and desilation poured, With'ring the heart's bright hopes

The younger twain of this fair band Had measured out life's goldes sand, While yot they sauthered band in hand l'houghtless of change or pain

Thus ever, when the tide of joy, Is at the flood, some dark alloy ! Taints the pare stream—but to 'destroy An o er wrought, laye of earth
